observations of a vessel which may have been radio-controlled and of a ship described as a small aircraft carrier or unusual type of tanker.

2. The vessel which was possibly radio-controlled resembled an MTB. The fact that the engines were completely silent when the ship was moving out of the harbor at a speed of approximately 20 knots  the ship was electrically propelled. The bridge was concealed by camouflaged metal bulkheads. No one appeared to be aboard.

3. The vessel which could have been a small aircraft carrier had a silhouette resembling that of a tanker and displaced an estimated 14,000 tons. The bridge was located forward of the beam and the engines were located aft. Parallel to and overlapping the spar deck, there was a single surface, on metal supports, which extended from bow to stern and was completely open at the stern.
